

The Iowa Poultry Association highlighted Rembrandt Foods this month to celebrate our membership.

Rembrandt Foods

Rembrandt Foods is one of the largest egg product suppliers in the world, and an employer to hundreds across the Iowa and the Midwest. They strive to feed the world through a responsible business model designed to produce minimal waste for a sustainable future. The team at Rembrandt takes part in feeding millions across the globe by supplying the foodservice and food ingredients industry. In fact, you have likely enjoyed Rembrandt eggs in cakes, candy bars, sauces, pastas, or while having breakfast at a restaurant or hotel. Rembrandt also provides egg products for pet foods, soil nourishment products and even the sports nutrition industry.

Rembrandt Foods started with a cornfield and a vision for something unique in the agriculture and food industry – a fully integrated and sustainable business. They own the birds that lay the eggs they process, and buy corn and grain from local farmers to feed them. By-product from those hens is returned to their farming partners to nourish the soil for the following year.

Rembrandt maintains high standards in terms of treatment of employees and birds, impact on the environment, transparency in business practices, fair and clear agreements, and financial integrity. Employees at Rembrandt Foods also demonstrate their desire to make a difference by donating time and efforts through Rembrandt Cares, an employee-driven program to make a positive impact on local communities. This includes packaging food for the needy, blood drives, and various volunteer activities that benefit several cities in IA as well as other regions where Rembrandt operates.
